

February 7, 2008

Marie Logue

Assistant Vice President for Academic Engagement and Programming
Office of Undergraduate Education

MARIE LOGUE is the assistant vice president for academic engagement and programming in the Office of Undergraduate Education. Dr. Logue has been a Rutgers academic and student affairs administrator for twenty-five years. She earned her B.A. at the College of St. Elizabeth and her M.A. and PhD (English) at Rutgers. As the associate dean for student development at Rutgers College for many years, she worked closely with students and faculty developing co-curricular programs and activities. In her new position in the reorganized Rutgers she and her staff work with faculty to develop and implement enrichment activities and programs that bring students and faculty into more active engagement with each other. These new structures include learning communities, field trips, lectures, demonstrations, films, and dinner and dialog programs that extend and enrich the learning that takes place in the classroom. Marie went to college expecting to be a high school English teacher. Then she went to graduate school to be an English professor. Then in her first years as a junior faculty member, she discovered the world of higher education administration. She has stories to tel